"The VETERAN.

"The Veteran," as we predicted frama, in six tableaux,

"The Veteran," as we predicted in anticipation of its production, has proved one of the most successful dramas ever brought out, even at Wallack's, spiendid as is its roll of dramatic victories. It would be hard to speak too highly of the perfect amoothness and sase with which the piece now runs. Each character has been east with admirable regard to the individual capacity and peculiarities of the player. Look, for example, at Mr. Lester Wallack's Loon, or at Mr. Glibert's Golonel Debnar. The old solaire belongs to a very of which Thacked and bear in modern English fiction—a type of which The character in modern English fiction—a type of which The character in modern English fiction—a type of which The character in modern English fiction—a type of which The character in modern English fiction—a type of which The character and bard of the control of the perfect of the servery inch of him a genisman, and that he is good alther and would be a good neighbor, and does his duty in a simple, manly, uppretending way, but he has no strong individual banes of character. Loon, too, though headstrong and wilful in a ce tain charming and agreeable fashion, is much the same kind of a man. These are parts, then, which a playgoer knows but too well are the very hardest of all to enact. It is comparatively any to play a villain, or a hypocrite, or a patriot, or something equally high colored; but it is rare indeed to find the roles of genilement who are remarkable only for their seatlemanhood made interesting and eelightful. In the hat a of Mr. Wailack and Mr. Gilbert two characters of just this type become living men, whom in a short three hours we learn to love and respect and whom we shall remember for years and years afterwards. Mr. Brougham's O'Flanacan—we adopt the spelling in the last act—also deserves a paragraph of panegric. The over yphages, and finds expre Seats at Academy, also 701 and 114 Broadway.
